WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- Cold Santa Ana winds will continue to create critical fire weather conditions for portions of Southern California through 12/22/17.
- The National Weather Service has issued Hard Freeze Warnings for most of the southern San Joaquin Valley through the morning of 12/22/17

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A high pressure ridge will largely be in control of the weather through the weekend. This means increasing stable inversions and a gradual warming trend, especially during the afternoon periods. Maximum temperatures should climb back; rising to above normal for most of the area Friday and lasting into the weekend. It appears that the strongest winds during the next 4 days would be this morning. Expect gusts between 20 to 30 mph and locally up to 40 mph along the west slopes of the Cascade and Sierra ranges plus some portions of the Sacramento Valley. A much lighter wind flow will occur today and last into Saturday. The shallow dry cold frontal passage, which was expected for Saturday night, appears to be weaker and would only provide a slight bump up in wind speeds along the west slopes of the Cascade and Sierra ranges. Models could change their tune on this feature so will be monitoring. The air mass will be dry through this period, with humidity values falling into the teens across the midslope and higher ridge areas. Coastal areas will see a reprieve in the low humidity at times due to weak onshore flow. The weather models have sped up their prediction for a slight break down in the ridge late Sunday into Monday. As it stands right now, cloud cover should increase and there could be a few light showers. A cold front would push in from the north and increase N to NE winds behind it, though confidence remains low. The late Sunday through early next week period is an uncertain one but plan for some alteration in the dominant ridge pattern.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Strong surface high pressure over the Great Basin will bring north to northeast winds across Central California and the deserts, there will be local north to northeast winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph through this evening. Minimum humidity will drop into the teens today. The back side of a Pacific trough will cause temperatures to remain 5 to 10 degrees below normal today, with mid 30s to mid 40s across the mountains and 50s to mid 60s in the valleys. Temperatures will warm and minimum humidity will be in the single digits and teens Friday through Monday as a ridge of high pressure builds into California from the Pacific Ocean. Temperatures will be 10 to 15 degrees above normal Sunday and Monday. The ridge of high pressure will weaken bringing a cooling trend and an increase in humidity Tuesday through the middle of next week. Winds will be light Friday through the middle of next week.
